FLORIDA SCHOOL SHOOTING

Walkouts, sit-ins planned

Aim is to push lawmakers to pass tougher gun laws

The mass shooting at a Florida high school that left 17 people dead has sparked calls for walkouts, sit-ins and other actions on school campuses across the United States aimed at pushing lawmakers to pass tougher gun laws.

Organizers behind the Women's March, an anti-Trump and female empowerment protest, called for a 17-minute walkout on March 14 to "protest Congress' inaction to do more than tweet thoughts and prayers in response to the gun violence plaguing our schools and neighborhoods."

The Network for Public Education, an advocacy organization for public schools, meanwhile, announced a "national day of action" on April 20, the anniversary of the 1999 shooting at Columbine High School in Colorado, in which two students opened fire on their classmates, killing 12 students and one teacher.

The organization is encouraging teachers and students to organize sit-ins, walkouts, marches and any other events to protest gun violence in schools.

"The politicians sit on their hands as our children and their teachers are murdered in their schools," Diane Ravitch, the group's president, and Carol Burris, its executive director, said in a post online.

The protest plans circulated widely on social media on Saturday, signaling that the outcry for new gun legislation may not fade away as it has after other recent mass shootings. Many of those shootings, including the deaths of 20 first-graders and six educators at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Connecticut in 2012, led to a push for new gun laws, but those efforts stalled in Congress.

"We need to make this moment a movement and to actually make changes that need to happen in this country so that these kinds of weapons, AR-15s, are not in the hands of people who shouldn't

New Milton housing advances

1,200-bed student complex will have stores, underpass

CORINA VANEK
Sun Staff Reporter

A proposed 1,221 bed student apartment complex on Milton Road is making its way through the city's approval process, and had its first public hearing in front of the Planning and Zoning Commission Wednesday.

The project, called Mill Town, will be geared toward student housing, but will also have 48,400 square feet of retail space, with three freestanding commercial establishments and mixed use commercial area on the bottom floor of the residential building.

The 1,221 beds will be included in 340 bedrooms, which range in size from studios to five-bedroom units. The project is proposed as part of a series of developments by Phoenix-based Vintage Partners.

City Planning Manager Tiffany Antol said Vintage and the city did parking studies about the development, and determined the residential component would need 0.77 parking spaces per bedroom. Vintage has proposed 0.79 spaces per bedroom, with 965 total parking spaces. The commercial component will have 198 parking spaces, which is what is required by code.
